The arrival of an advance representative for the greatest show on Mars could not have caused more tumuit in the minds of Tody Hamilton and twenty others than the meeting yesterday between Miss Johanna, the chimpanzes from Lisbon, and Col. Chiko of Central Tody Hamilton was out and over at the Erie

Basin before 6 e'clock in the morning to superintend the transfer of Johanna. Of the two Tody was the more enthusiastic. Johanna was still surly from the effects of a long sea royage on the Portuguese steamer Dona began to unwind the chains from her case that she was fairly awakened. Then she grasped one of the colls in her paws and snatched the sailor over to her side of the cage. Three other sailors came, and for a time there was a tug-of-war that would have cone credit to Caledonian sports. Johanna was finally ambdued, and, with a loud roar and a bad grace, she dropped sullenly into one corner of the cage.

After Treasurer Young had turned over s check to Uncle Sam's men for $700 ad valorum duty, Johanna was boxed up as tight as a drum. Over the sliding door of the cage was a heavy planking of inch boards, while the corners and edges were of double thickness and heavily riveted. The show people were not going to entertain the people of New York with a runaway chimpanzee. Finally the box was hoisted from the steamer's hold to a truck, and Johanna was taken on her first ride in New York, up Broadway and Fifth avenue to the Arsenal in Central Park.

Chiko seemed to divine the presence of the visitor when the box was holsted to his floor in the Arsenal. Perhaps he recalled the mode of his own transportation to the big steelbarred cage, which had been divided to accommodate his companion. At any rate, he jumped from the window, and with a bark that sounded like "Hello," plunged to the corner where the boxed-up Johanna was awaiting her release. From within came a muffled answer, to which Chiko responded with a wild where the boxed-up Johanna was awaiting her release. From within came a muffled answer, to which Chiko responded with a wild roar of delight. He iumped in the air and brought both hands together as though applianding, and then crawled back to the corner and anxiously watched the workmen.

The other watchers were quite as impatient as Chiko. It was to be an interesting sight—this meeting between two chimiantzees, which Tody Hamilton persists are really gorillas. Three Crowlers would not be a match for Chiko in a rough-and-tumble fight, and as for Kittle, well, she would be disdained by Johanna as an undersized child.

The release of Johanna into her new apartments was carefully conducted. The box was first raised on wooden horses to the narrow opening and then fastened and wedged to the steel bars. Eight men were needed in the work, which was watched by Superintendent G. E. Burna. The front of the box was dit away with axes, so that the sliding door, which was also nailed, could be reached, and the work was stoo slow for Chiko. He swung himself with one arm on the iron bars, kicked the heavy wooden partition at the other end, and executed a song and dance that would find favor in a music hall.

When his anger was at its height the workmen raised the last nail and slowly lifted the sliding door. Mr. Burns yelled to the crowd, "Eack from the cage," and then Johanna poked her head slowly from the opening, and in a hesitating way crawled over to the front of the steel cage in full view of the spectators. In a second came a hoars bark from Chiko, who stood waiting in the rear of the opposite cage. Johanna turned, and then with mutual cries of joy and recognition the animals bounded toward each other, their heads striking against the bars like heads in an intercollegiate football game. The crowd yelled applause and Chiko jumped back, kicked bis heels in the air, and hooted like a boy at play. Johanna with well may be a light on the front of her cage, and then the queer beasts stood as though waiting each for the other smiles with her old keeper. Then she daintily chewed a banana, and chattered away as though making inquiries about the country. After a time she dropped on all fours to the floor, and put her ear against the siding to hear what was going on in Chiko's cell. Her curiosity awakened, she crawled along and peeped through one corner of the opening, and Chiko, catching her glance, leaped to the bars and barked away vociferously. Then Johanna returned to Manoel Jesus and her new keeper, E. R. Goss. She showed great joy over Manoel's presance, and cried aloud when he left. Mr. James A. Bailey of the Barnum & Bailey shows saw Johanna for the first time yesterday.

Bailey shows saw Johanna for the first thin yesterday.

Chiko is much larger and stronger than Johanna. The superhuman strength of this brute was once well tested. In his cage was a heavy steel nut which had been screwed on with a wrench in the hands of two men. Chiko, in a playful mood, one day turned this off with his fingers as easily as a gambler turns a card. He has often bent the heavy steel bars of his care. card. He has often bent the heavy steel bars of his cage. Chike cost $5,000 and Johanna $3,750 laid down in Lisben, which is a sort of world's market for rare animals.

NALL SHOT THEM BOTH,

Mrs. Manga's Story of the Shooting of Francisco Paolo and Nicolo Muifiso, Quite a sensation was caused in the Tombs Police Court yesterday when Antonia Manza. a young Italian woman, came in and accused James Nall of having shot Francisco Paolo and Sicolo Mulfiso, the two Italians who are lying dangerously wounded in St. Vincent's Hosanother in a row in the house of Mrs. Joseph The Manza woman was in the court room at the morning session, and corroborated Nall's story to the effect that the two men had shot each other and that he was on his way to notify the police when he was arrested. Jus-tice Martin was satisfied with the truth of this story and held Nall in only $1,000 bail as a witness to await the result of the men's story and held Nall in only $1.000 ball as a witness to await the result of the men's wounds.

It seems that Nall is a friend of Mrs. Joseph having been godfather to her children. As soon as Justice Martin took his seat on the beach at the atternoon session, Antonia came up to him and, between her tears, said that she had not told the truth in the morning, and that she had been persuaded to lie by Mrs. Joseph, in order to save Nall.

"I couldn't resit with the burden of the lis on my soul," said Antonia, and I had to come back and tell the truth. Nall shot those men. They were fighting, and Nall pulled our a pistol and fired three times at them."

Justice Martin ordered another warrant to be issued for Nall at once. One of the court officers recognized Nall among the erowd of spectators in the court, and he was hastily put under arrest and heid without bail.

The rage had taken fire probably by apontaneous combustion. The biane only lasted five minutes, but in that time transfrort streat was as sammed full of people as it is ever likely to be. There was no sample done by the fire.

LIVE TOPICS AROUT TOWN.

Mr. Irving's manner at supper is interesting even to people who have seen him many times on festal occasions. There is something remarkably odd and picturesque about his melancholy appearance, combined with the unquestionable joviality and good fellowship of the man. When the newspapers announce, as they usually do, that Mr. Irving made a suc cessful speech at one of the innumerable suppers and dinners which he has attended, they refer only to the first set speech of the even-ing. This is invariably a scholarly and thoughtful essay, delivered with marked im-pressiveness of style and with great theatric effect, but it never terminates Mr. Irving's speechmaking for that particular evening. It is after the four or five formal speeches, which seem to be a painful necessity of every big banquet, that Mr. Irving really bristles up and begins to do his talking. Sometimes he speaks three times in an evening and sometimes six. He gets up and answers the people who make speeches about him. He amiles and chuckles to himself at the funny stories that are told, and if a point comes up after any man's speaking or story telling which strikes Mr. Irving as a good one, the tall, lank form rises again into view, the sallow face takes on a retrospective smile, and the actor shakes his forefinger warningly at his hearers. Then he tells a story—it is always a good one—and drops back into his chair again. No one has ever known him to be in a hurry to depart from a dinner, and his tenacity of memory in recalling points about the speeches which have been made during the evening is unrivalled. During all the festivities the English actor's countenance is that of a removacini and dyspeptic cardinal, but the impression is a mask, which is easily disproved by the enjoying glitter of the tragedian's even and the evident enthusiasm with which he enters late the fun. form rises again into view, the sallow face

The horsemanship of the women to be seen in the riding schools of this city causes derisive smiles among the Southern and Western women who see it. There are a few instances of fearless riding by young women who have learned to scamper across the fields in the country, and who have a good seat and a firm eye, but the majority of women riders are painful to look at. It is evident to horsewomen from out of town, who ride for the pleasure of riding and not to reduce their weight, that the dread of too much fat takes most of the women to the riding schools in New York. The riders are, in some instances, so ponderous that getting them in the saddle is a work of breathless danger. They always wear the tightest habits possible, and after the first few steps of the horse their faces are inflamed and their breath comes in quick and plaintive gasps. But they stick to it until the prescribed half hour's exercise has been accomplished, and then they weigh themselves and dress, under the impression that their figures are regaining their sylph-like and youthful proportions. The riding masters believe that these women eat and drink so much after their exercise that there is never any perceptible decrease in weight. country, and who have a good seat and a firm

Buffalo Bill sat in a box at Palmer's Theatre on Saturday night with his head sunk upon his chest and his arms folded. His pose was not unlike that of a bucolic tragedian. The audience did not recognize Mr. Cody. This was due in a large measure to the white lights which came up from the footlights, and which threw the back of his head and his distinguishing shock of long hair into the shadew. His moustache, goatee, and imperial, which were formerly jet black, are now almost gray, and the look of robust health has disappeared from the lamous showman's face, altogether there is a marked difference between the Buffalo Bill of to-day and the man who attracted so much attention when his Wild Weat show was first placed on exhibition here. was due in a large measure to the white lights

Mr. Damrosch has much at stake in his row with the musicians. It was announced in the newspapers that he was so nervous and unstrung after the strike of his orchestra that he was incapable of taiking for some time. His life is apparently wrapped up in his work with the Symphony Orchestra, and he in some way regards himself as the trustee for the large sum set apart for the maintenance of the orchestra by Mr. Carnegle, the Vanderbilts, and others. The temerity of Mr. Damrosch in fighting the Musicai Union has long been the cause of astonishment to reporters and others who are familiar with the workings of that remarkable association. Musicians are not noted for calm, rational, and deliberative action upon any particular question, but when it comes to the question of their incomes their hearts are touched to the core. The least important and most conventional meetings of the Musicai Union would ordinarily strike terror into the heart of a fire-ating Chicago Anarchist, and when the musicians really begin to debate a subject which is of paramount importance to them, the spectators long for the police. It is altogether the most tempestuous and violent body of debaters in this city. was incapable of talking for some time. His

The Mannlicher rifle, which has just been tested in Europe, is declared to be inferior to would have a rather meagre chance if opposed to any of the crack army corps of France. This rifle is smokeless, and has a range of three miles. An American naval officer who has written an article upon the comparative three miles. An American naval officer who has written an article upon the comparative power of European arms, said yesterday that a skilful marksman could create have in an army with the new rifle at a distance of two miles, and that in an unsettied country it would be impossible to tell from which point the attack came. This would seem to indicate that cavalry will be atradition hereafter. When the enemy can lie in ambush and mow down horses and men two miles away, there will be no more attring scenes or stories of carrying forts and other strong positions by a rush of cavalry. A two-mile rush in the face of a storm of builets coming from an unknown quarter would have results compared with which the charge of the Light Brigade seems like child's play.

Some of the comments upon the Tammans

Some of the comments upon the Tamman Hall chief are absurd in view of the well known characteristics of the man. It is said that Mr. Croker "affects" silence, and that it is his policy to be sphinx-like and uncommunicative. Reticence is as natural to Mr. Croker as breathing. He is by nature calm, thoughtful, and silent. On the race tracks at all times he is as thoroughly uncommunicative as, for instance, James II. Keene. One man talks about as much as the other. Both are keen sportsmen, and both pay close attention to the running of horses. Neither of them smiles, but the jockeys and trainers, and other men who have business with keene or Croker, approach them unbestnatingly, for they are always surejof a courteous hearing. Incidentally they are also sure that any renightsy receive will be couched in two or three words. Nobody, by the way, ever hears that Mr. Keene maintains a "noticy of silence," though as a matter of fact he is less talkative than Mr. Croker. that Mr. Croker "affects" silence, and that I

Lying about the weather will not be so easy hereafter as it has been in the past. Some in gentous person, who has evidently quarrelled with his friends about the temperature of yesterday and last summer, has invented a self-reterday and last summer, has invented a self-recording thermometer, which makes a mechanical record every day of the extreme height and death of the thermometer in the course of twenty-four hours. It will have to be a prefty strong machine to keep up with the variations of the temperature in this town, but it has been subjected to a severe test, and is apparently satisfactory. Any man can have one in his house—if he cares to pay the exorbitant price asked for it—and can have ready at hand any number of beautiful little charts, which will indicate exactly the condition of the weather at any hour of the day for a year or more past.

In a Sixth avenue surface car yesterday a small man with a worsted "comforter around his neck, ear tabs on his ears, and further equipped with goloshes, wristlets, fur gloves, and a heavy overcoat, sat puffing in gives, and a heavy overcoat, sat puffing in the forward corner. He had a cold. Men who take such precautions always have. When he was not blowing his nose violently and secwing at the other tassengers he was keeping his brady eyes upon the indicator used for recording the fares of the passengers. Suddenly he stamped vigorously upon the floor and began to bob up and down as he shook his flourer at the conductor. Then he relied abrilly:

linger at the conductor. Then he relied abrilly:

I've get you now! Iting up that lady's fare! You can't food me, 'cause I seen you.'

The conductor walked forward calmiy, and said with the utmost politeness:

That is the fourth time you have called me to account for not ringing up fares since we led Fourteenth street. I rang this lady's fore up as she came on the car.'

I've you did, said the little old man derisively. I seen you not do it.'

The conductor protested again, with the utmost politeness and then walked to the rear particular to the car it is a superior of the car it is a superior. At Third-third street the old man suddenly burst out with another attack, and when he left the car at Forty-fifth street he was multering at a great rate about 'rascally conductors.' Meanwhile the amignifity of the conductor was entirely undistricted.

He doesn't mean anything, he said in a malter-al-fact was. We get all kinds of ciality of this line, and that I some of them.

THE DAVIS WILL CASE SETTLED, Contestants Get Their Claims, and All Con-

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.-The famous Davis will case is settled and $11,000,000, the value of the estate of Andrew J. Davis, the Montana millionaire, will soon be divided among the heirs. A settlement has been made with the contestants, Henry A. Root and Maria Cummings, on the basis of their original claims, which was three and a haif elevenths of the entire estate. This amounts to $3,500,000 in entire estate. This amounts to $3,500,000 in the settlement. The contestants also received their expenses and counsel fees, which amount to nearly $500,000. There are four other heirs, George W. Davis, who has been employed here a number of years in the Herald business office; his prother, E. H. Davis, who is in the coal business here; Andrew J. Davis, and John E. Davis, brothers of the Chicago men, who live in Butte, Mon.

The wealth of Andrew J. Davis was accumulated chiefly in the Montana Smelting Company, of which he was the chiefl owner. It is estimated that the estate would bring at forced sale between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000.

Just as he was about to administer the holy com-munion he fell in a faint. The congregation thought he was stricken with heart disease. He was removed to his home, where he soon recovered consciousness. Mr. Douglass is to-day conlined to his bed, very ill.
